

Ke Jingwei

Mr Ke Jingwei graduated with highest honour (Summa cum Laude) from SMU's Bachelor of Science (Economics) programme. He now works for the International Monetary Fund and supports the research and training initiatives in the South Asia region. His education and work experience has equipped him with a strong foundation in Macroeconomics.

Why You Chose To Teach?

I wanted to give back. As a trained economist, I felt that my comparative advantage in giving back to the society was through imparting my knowledge in Economics to those who need it. There could be a thousand other work that I could do but the amount of value-addedness that I would bring would be less than what I could achieve by teaching Economics.

Making Learning And Life Meaningful For Your Students:

I am a strong believer of mentoring – giving advice to and grooming those that are seasons behind myself. As someone who has benefited from such advices, I would love to nurture the next generation and make them see life beyond books and examinations.

What You Hope To Help Students To Become:

From Uber surge pricing to raising water bills – Economics is everywhere. I hope that my students will become great lovers of Economics and discover how it is intricately woven into our daily lives!
